00:50:18 Ian: Tom, how does land magically for parks? Who funds an aquatic center?

00:53:39 Mary McKenzie: Can peroplr add their last names please, as Shannon asked?

01:01:39 Ian: It's good to see that the majority of the folks in the survey was about the future of livability.

01:03:07 Ian: Title 11, ADA is the code and all projects will be scrutinized.

01:04:19 Michael Donovan': IT is very encourtaging to see the community respond to growth and redvelopment of the community. I'm saddened that rather than embracing the sense of the community the answer seems to be to trash the process.

01:04:42 Ian: Please, there was no 'steal the survey'. I hope we can get beyond unreal conspiracy theories.

01:04:53 Mary McKenzie: Asking questions about the process is not trashing it.

01:07:20 Mary McKenzie: Scooters are supposed to use the bike lanes?

01:10:22 Ian: Roy, don't believe what you see? One of the first slides was an overwhelming likeness to frame three, the highrises.

01:10:36 Ian: 41%

01:11:32 Ian: I suspect that if your questioning the survey, it's not going your way for your agenda.

- 01:11:43 Jon Anderson: Questions were optional though, I think he was suggesting based on comments there seems to be more of an even division since there may have been a fair amount of people finding none of the three options match what they wanted to see
- 01:20:25 Ian: Tom, I would hope that your 25 year old trope of no growth would adapt to the desperate need for housing that people need and want.
- 01:22:10 Michael Donovan': I think the survey gives a sense of the community perspective, but certainly represents a diversity of views, as one would expect. the process will be interesting as we look at meeting climate and housing goals while celebrating the community
